HOW IT WORKS

Muscle stimulation and radiofrequency, delivered together

The applicator patches are placed on the face and the machine does the rest, so the treatment is hands-free. Each patch delivers two kinds of energy at the same time.

Electrical muscle stimulation

Electrical pulses are designed to stimulate the fine muscles of the face, so that they contract more strongly than they do in everyday movement. The manufacturer calls these supramaximal contractions.

Radiofrequency

Radiofrequency energy is delivered through the same patch at the same time, to warm the skin. The manufacturer describes the heating as even across the whole patch.

Hands-free

No needles and nothing to hold. Up to five channels run at once, and each applicator can also be used on its own.

The manufacturer's terms

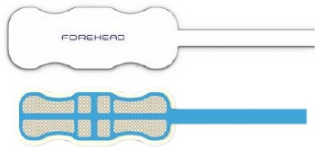

The manufacturer calls its stimulation technology High Intensity Focused Electrical Stimulation, and also lists a feature it calls Kinetic Impedance Technology.

We do not publish percentage results for this machine. You will see figures quoted online for facial muscle stimulation, such as a percentage reduction in wrinkles or an increase in muscle tone. Those figures come from studies of a different manufacturer's device and cannot be carried over to this one. Independent research on this type of treatment is still limited and results vary from person to person. Set your clients' expectations on that basis and they will thank you for it.

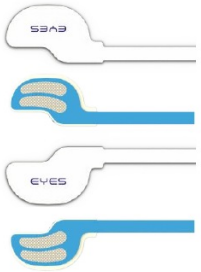

THE APPLICATORS

Five shapes, seven patches, five channels

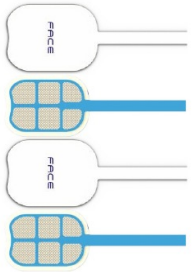

Each patch is shaped for one area of the face or neck. Seven patches are supplied, in five shapes.

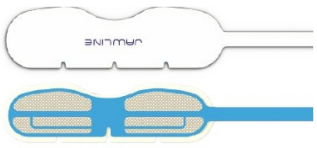

Forehead
One patch

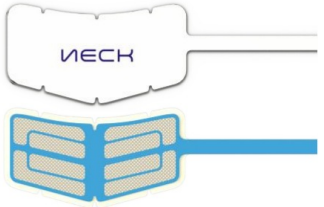

Eyes
Two patches

Face
Two patches, for the cheeks

Jawline
One patch

Neck
One patch

Five channels at once
Up to five channels work at the same time, so several areas of the face are treated in one session.

Together or separately
The applicators can also be used independently, so you can treat a single area when that is all the client needs.

MODES

Three working modes, three output modes

Auto mode

The system recommends treatment settings for the area being treated, which makes the machine easy to learn and to use.

Manual mode

For operators with enough experience to set the parameters themselves, guided by their training and by how the treatment feels to the client.

High Power mode

A higher output setting. Use it only as directed in the user manual and your training.

Three output modes. The machine has three output modes. The manufacturer describes them as working at three different depths, which it names as the epidermis, the dermis and the SMAS layer. That is the manufacturer's description and we have not seen independent test data for it.

THE TREATMENT

What a session involves

These points come from the manufacturer's guidance. Your own protocol should follow the user manual, your training and your insurer's requirements.

About 20 minutes

The manufacturer's guide time for a full face.

A course of sessions

The manufacturer's protocol is a course of about eight sessions. More can be added.

How it feels

The manufacturer describes warmth and a pulsing sensation, similar to a facial massage, as the muscles contract. There are no needles.

Afterwards

The manufacturer states that no recovery time is needed, so clients normally return to their day straight after a session.

Screen every client. The treatment can be offered to women and men, but electrical stimulation and radiofrequency are not suitable for everyone. Follow the contraindications in the user manual, your training and your insurer's requirements, and do not treat anyone you are unsure about. For clients who have had dermal filler in the cheeks, the manufacturer's guidance is to wait at least three weeks after the injection, and until there is no tenderness or bruising.

CLASSIFICATION

What this machine is, and what it is not

We are a supplier of MHRA registered medical lasers as well as cosmetic devices, and we are careful about the difference. It matters to your insurer and it matters to your council.

It is a cosmetic device

The EMYOUNG CLF3 is supplied for professional cosmetic use. It is not a medical device, it is not registered with the MHRA, and we will never describe it as either.

It is not EMFACE

EMFACE is the brand name of a different manufacturer's device. The EMYOUNG CLF3 is not made by, approved by or connected with that manufacturer, and results published for that device do not apply to this one.

Two things to check for yourself before you buy. First, that your insurer covers facial muscle stimulation with radiofrequency and the areas you intend to treat. Second, whether your local authority treats it as a special treatment requiring a licence. We will help you with the wording if it is useful.
